Jodi Wheeler-Toppen is a former science teacher with a PhD in science education. She has been fascinated by insects for years, and even raised dung beetles in her classroom! Jodi is the author of a number of science books for children and teachers. Her activity book Science Experiments that Explode and Implode was a Junior Library Guild Selection in 2011. Jodi lives in Atlanta with her family.

I'm excited about this book for my daughter's Christmas gift. I'm going to pick up some of the items for her to conduct some experiments and give this to her for Christmas. I know when she gets the book, she is going to want to try out some of the experiments quickly. The directions seem pretty simple for my 10 year old to do on her own.

very nice

I bought this for my 9 year old daughter for Christmas. I thought it would be a book just for her to read since she's all about anything STEM. This book was much more than I expected it has so many actual projects for her to do. The projects are not complicated she's done about 3 of them so far and has a lot more picked out that she wants to do.

only contains 5-6 very basic experiments

I love these books, but I wish they were not marketed just for "girls"! I have 2 girls and I feel the same way about all gender-specific marketing!!! My girls love all things math and science...

My nephew did one of the activities in this book. Should I be worried? Is he going to become a girl?
